Artist Statement

My process for creating pieces of art is really just finding a way to convey what I am feeling or what my topic is. First, I create at least two to three ideas for my topic, then, I pick which one I like best and create a “rough draft” of my piece. As the time goes on, I will end up changing a few things until finally making the final product. The benefits that my art classes gave me was the knowledge of the human figure and how to be more observant.

This piece is to represent my idea of how the relationship between people should be. With all the politics going on this year, I felt it was an important issue to address. I feel that humans are human, no matter what you look like. We are all made of the same material so why do we treat each other differently even though we are all the same?
